Between Us

For the past few weeks mothers, wives, sweethearts and friends have been trying to decide just what to pack in those boxes to go overseas; we had to get the Christmas party early this year, and months ago many have been planning these gifts. Several weeks ago A. K. Amos had a picture of Alice made for her daddy, who is over in England, and along with the picture went a box filled with the choicest of everything time and money could buy. She found out just in time to begin work on another box that the one with the picture of her young daughter had been lost when the ship went down carrying thousands of bags of Christmas mail. But you can't daunt A. K., and when she was told to get the picture of her daughter, she was not deterred. Boxes, if you may be sure, are not just as good as the last was on the way. Mrs. John H. Morrison also had a picture of her son, who is somewhere on the high seas, and she was distressed when she carried it to the post office to be mailed, and it was found to be a few inches too large. But alterations were speedily made, and the box is on its way. Surely no soldier from our country will be neglected when the big day arrives. A letter from Horace McDougald, who is somewhere in England, tells us of the strangeness of that country compared to our. However, he is delighted with the country and its customs, and says that the only thing he knows right now he would enjoy is a bicycle. Very few people have cars in Europe, and few children have bicycles. This week finds Dot Daniels with her two babies in the Middle West. Dot is closing up the house for awhile, and says she will be back before too long—Cable to her from our officers in the Pacific, and they assure her that they are safe and happy, even though they are so far from home. Little Maxine Brunson literally took the show in the parade the past week dressed as Santa Claus. Al at Al DeLoach, she couldn't take the cheers from the audience, but Al at Al through the ceremony after his queen abdicated the throne for her mother's arms. It was a great show, and Myrtle Donaldson says this was her first Halloween carnival, and that she was amazed at the whole affair. The P.T.A. cleared over a hundred dollars, so our readers don't wonder that our town feels very proud of its success. Will see you around town.

Resent Being Ordered

IN WASHINGTON national leaders are considering methods which will best contribute to the maintenance of the right of freedom of individual action is the most treasured heritage which is ours today. It is the sacred privilege for which we are waging a war to the death with those foreign powers which would destroy that right.

In pursuance of our war for freedom, men have been asked to risk their lives in battle. These youngsters, most of them, haven't chosen that sacrifice, but yielded because leaders had determined that it was the surest and speediest way to victory. These American lads have been compelled to surrender their personal freedom so that Americans as a whole may enjoy that freedom. In the fighting forces men are being commanded to stand in the place of the man left at home—the housekeeper and the breadwinner. Allowing about the sacred right of freedom when and as they please. During a debate in Congress this very week, when consideration was being given to the idea of compulsory mobilization of civilian manpower, Oregon Republican Senator McCallum, in opposition to the measure, said that the most distasteful thing ever conceived by the American mind.

Evidently the distinguished statesman had forgotten the draft law which compels men to brave shot and shell at the battlefield. If draft for civilian activities is a crime, what is there to be said in defense of the draft to face death on the battlefield?

Yes, American people do resent being ordered, but it is better to take orders from friends who would protect us than from foes who would destroy us. Labor would do well to bear this in mind.

The People Spoke

THE PEOPLE of America spoke last week when they went to the polls in national assembly to elect their public servants for the ensuing two years.

Surveying the results casually it is easy to recognize that what they said sort of generally expressed a growing dissatisfaction with some of the things that have been developing under the extended New Deal regime. The whitened-down majority by which the New Deal party was permitted to retain control of congress says that much in unmistakable words; however, it will require more than a mere guess to interpret the full meaning of this message from the people.

Already we are seeing indications that some of the discontents—stand-patters, if the word is more expressive—read a message which will lead them into error. Certainly the people did not demand a complete reversal of the present course of conduct in national affairs.

The Pontiac we have been driving for the past eight years was a standard of excellence when it fell into our hands. We noted its knee action, which gave it a sort of weaving motion akin to the action of the ocean, and passengers on the back seat often complained that this smooth riding nauseated them to the extreme. We used to get sea-sick ourselves. That was eight years ago. The velvety sensation has long ago disappeared. The car also had three forward speeds, one reverse, and a brake. We never pushed that car to top speed, and don't know how fast it could have gone; we seldom rode in reverse; but we used the brakes a good many times. Four times in those eight years the brakes needed reoiling. Maybe we used them too much, but we have acquired an increasing idea that brakes were intended to avoid danger of riding into harm.

In a sort of corresponding sense, when the New Deal went into authority ten years ago it was equipped with all the adjuncts which contributed to speed and easy riding—it had knee action to spare; it had three forward speeds, and it used the top speed most of the time. It forgot the presence of brakes, and kept going top speed ahead. During all the intervening years there has sprung up a sort of national sea-sickness, and some people have become nauseated to the extreme.

Want Our Suspenders

THERE IS SOMETHING wrong with a civilization which does not permit a man to wear his pants caught up as he would like to, and we are here now entering our protest against the customs which have tended to take our pants off us.

Society has decreed, so it appears (and we don't know who issued the decree), that gentlemen shall not wear suspenders. One man wearing belts are entitled to be considered in modern elite circles. What with an increasing flabbiness about the waist, we have found it more and more difficult to hold our pants in place with a belt. When they drop down an inch or two, and are snatched up again, the tendency is for the tip end of our shirt to crawl out and spread around. In our early youth, we were taught that respectable men should not tolerate a display of shirt tips. As a child we spent five cents a month attending missionary societies in an effort to compel our Chinese friends to trim their hair and their shirts in. And we did it. A good job on them, so far as we are aware, so Chinamen wear their shirt flapping on air, and we haven't seen a picture of a Chinaman with a queue since we can remember.

While we were civilizing the heathen, however, we have slipped back. Last summer we saw longer shirt-tails in the air in Statesboro than any Chinaman ever dreamed of, and at Rotary dinners every Monday there is a man with hair so long that it reminds us of the nickel we spent long years ago in an attempt to induce those Chinese men to trim their hair. (No, it's not the man you are thinking of.)

But what we started to discuss is the absence of support for a man's pants. We called at a gentleman's furnishing store a day or two ago for a pair of suspenders. What the clerk laid out before us appeared like a tragedy—strips not wider than your finger, and only two inches of elastic at the tips! We asked him if they were playthings, and he solemnly assured us they were for real men.

We bought them and started to attach them in the old-time way. There wasn't a button on our pants, in this belt-wearing age. What would you do? At the notion store we called for a package of bachelor buttons (the kind men used to buy for emergency when their wives had spent their afternoons at the missionary society), and the lady clerk told us as bachelor button except things which grow in the yard.

So what? We worked a combination of belt and suspenders, and managed to get home without our pants falling off in the streets. And as we walked homeward we ruminated in the decadence of man. It's a strenuous life we are living, what with no buttons on your pants to hang your suspenders to, and no suspenders to hang them to if buttons were there. How does society get that way? Just one step at a time, to be sure. It's a sad day for an old-timer when he can't keep his pants up for want of buttons and suspenders, we solemnly declare.

Red Cross Chapter Has Busy Program

Announcement is made that Bulloch county Red Cross chapter will have a quota of 100 sweaters, 50 mufflers and 200 pairs of gloves to make. The knitted garments provided by chapter volunteers have been enthusiastically received by men in the armed forces. The Red Cross assumed responsibility for making and delivering these garments by December 31, 1942. It is hoped that all chapters will complete the quota already assigned them by the end of the year.

It is explained that the army and navy do not attempt to provide knitted articles for their own men. The commanding officer distributes them only to those men on special duty who are exposed to the elements and to those at staging areas who are leaving shortly for cold climates.

WE MISS YOU

By Dorothy S. Salter

I did not know until yesterday you and Jim went away. The only thing I can think of is that you and Jim went away. I am all alone here. I am all alone here. I am all alone here.

We all are proud to hear of Jim's new job. Now, don't you fret and sob! He'll come back when his work is done over there.

Again peace will reign here! I'm just the man from around the bend, who believes that right will win. I cannot forget that day in December— I was wounded, remember?

The spirit of our American soldier is alive today, thank God. As he was in the days gone by— They'll never let America die.

SHORTAGE OF GAS LOTS PLANE DOWN

DeLoach Flew Saturday Afternoon From Florida City in Hour and Half

You'd think a match is a mighty insignificant instrument, but because somebody struck one and dropped it in the grass ten miles northeast of Statesboro, Robert DeLoach, army aviator, wrecked a $30,000 bomber plane three miles from Statesboro on hour and a half after he left Marietta, Fla., in the plane Saturday afternoon.

Boiled down to simpler words, DeLoach lost his course while attempting to fly from Marietta to Savannah. He was confused by the smoke created by a wood fire in the Ogeechee river swamp near New Hope church eastward almost to Blitchton. The fire had started earlier in the morning from an unknown origin and all efforts to douse the flames failed till the smoke spread in both directions east and west and filled the air with a dense smoke.

The aviator, losing his course in the smoke, found his gas running low; circled around for a landing place, but was unable to locate the landing field. Finally, he determined to land on the Port of Highway three miles from Statesboro. As he hit the pavement a passenger car, unaware of what was happening, headed straight into him. He tilted his landing gear and went into the air high enough to clear the car (Dr. and Mrs. B. A. Deal were the occupants), and landed on the edge of the pavement, headed toward a light pole. Before he could stop, the damage was wrought—a wing of the $30,000 bomber plane had been crushed.

Coming to town, Mr. DeLoach phoned to Savannah Air Base and an army wrecker came and dismantled his machine and carted it in for repairs the same night.

Mr. DeLoach, aviator in charge of the machine, stated that his home was Glennville. He was aware of the presence of the landing field in Statesboro, but the smoke which had thrown him off his course also obscured the landing field here.

FARMERS URGED TO TERRACE LANDS

County AAA Chairman Discusses Need for Pastures

Bullock county farmers may terrace their land and pasture lands, according to a statement issued by the county committee, chairman of the county committee, stated at the Farm Bureau meeting Friday night. Mr. Hodges explained that payments on soil building practices are based on results in the future and that to collect these benefit payments, certain standards would have to be met. The soil building allowance for a farm in 1943 will be materially larger than in the past for planting winter legumes and summer legumes, as well as carrying on other practices. The payments on terracing, preparing and seeding pastures would be an additional allowance based on the amount of the practices carried out.

The AAA year will end August 31 in 1943. In the past it has ended in 1942. The old 4-H club from Port of a candle lighting ceremony at the meeting which was closing the achievement week for clubbers. FRIDAY TO BRING SOUND OF THE GUN

Marks Opening of Season for Hunting Georgia's Favorite Game Bird

Friday, November 20, marks a bright red day on the calendar of the Georgia hunter and trapper, according to Wildlife Director Zack D. Cravay.

On that day quail season opens, and with the majority of hunters this is the favorite game bird. Best of all, Director Cravay has the quail crop is the largest it has been in many seasons, due in great measure to favorable nesting conditions last summer. The limit is 15 per day, 20 per week or possession, and the season continues until March 1.

On the same day the season on bear, turkey and raccoon opens throughout the state, and already has opened on deer, duck, coot, goose and squirrel.

Trappers can be killing and repairing their traps also, for tomorrow opens the season for snaring foxes, muskrats, mink, marten, bobcat, otter, skunk and wildcat. The director reminded trappers that they must have a license, which costs $5 for residents and $25 for non-residents. Also fur dealers must obtain a license, and every person, firm or corporation who purchases or receives a mammal monthly report to the Division of Wildlife.

Beavers are protected throughout the year from trappers as well as hunters, and are being spotted in Georgia more frequently than formerly. The director urged landowners who know of an unwanted colony on their property to notify the wildlife division. He said he would send a trapper to transplant the colony in a state park or other protected area.

We have heard of a new clue. The lady described last week was Mrs. Edith Anderson. She called for her tickets with an address after the papers had gone to the postoffice, and she attended the picture the same evening. Said she liked it.

SWEET POTATOES ARE PROFITABLE

Brooklet Farmer Grows Eight Tons Per Acre Yields Good Income

It is possible to produce about eight tons of sweet potatoes per acre, J. W. Forbes, Brooklet community farmer, declares.

Mr. Forbes was one of three Bullock county farmers that attempted to see just how many pounds of potatoes could be produced on an eighth of an acre by using the Irish potato method of planting the sweet potatoes. He shipped up his small sweet potatoes about February 20. He harvested them November 10. This eighth of an acre produced 2,026 pounds of sweet potatoes, which is equivalent to more than 125 bushels of corn per acre. One pound of dried sweet potatoes is equal to one pound of corn for feed to cows, hogs and mules. The potatoes are all large and not suitable for table use. But Mr. Forbes did not grow them for table use. He was of the opinion that grain yields for corn and other crops were too small to continue the expansion of livestock, unless a crop could be found that would produce more feed per acre. He is convinced that sweet potatoes will give the desired increase in yield. They can be shredded and dried, then stored just as corn for use any time during the year for all classes of livestock.

N. B. Nesmith also tried the Irish potato system of planting sweet potatoes and found that he doubled his yield. Mr. Nesmith planted an eighth of an acre with draws along the side of his pieces. This gave him an accurate check on the results.

B. B. Deal also tried this new system of growing sweet potatoes for feed. He is convinced that it will work, but dry weather reduced his yield on all his potatoes materially.
